DICKERSON GALLERY MELBOURNE

Greg Lewis, Sunset - Riverton Estuary, oil on canvas, 25 x 31cm

The second installment of Dickerson Gallery's group exhibition Land, Sea & Sky sees the works of established artists from New Zealand cross the Tasman - some for the first time in their artistic careers. Director, Stephen Nall, visited a number of galleries during a trip through New Zealand in 2008 to hand pick the artists for the exhibition. In addition to the realist bent the first installment of Land, Sea & Sky held in 2007, Nall was determined to exhibit a group that displayed an exceptionally high level of technical aptitude.

Steve Harris, a senior self-taught painter, is highly regarded in Australia and New Zealand for his realistic precision paintings of monolith-like subjects. George Baloghy is considered one of Auckland's most senior painters of urban landscapes and a master of the cityscape. Sam Foley is an emerging young artist of outstanding ability. Based in Dunedin, Foley is a painter of bush landscapes and urban nightscapes of unequalled beauty and tranquillity. Greg Lewis is at once a painter of both social realism and monumental landscapes with a painter's eye never far from his hometown of Dunedin.

This exhibition brings together a group of striking individuals, each with their own particular take of how their surrounds imposes itself first onto them and then into the work they produce. It celebrates the finer details of our environments, and perfectly illustrates the varying ways in which they, as artists, see them.
